

TUAM COURT
BRIEFS

Driver was over limit

A 22 year old Tuam woman with no insurance or driving licence was also detected for drunk driving and was given a two year disqualification.

Tuam Court was told that Molly Thorpe from 7 Meadow Court, Milltown Road, Tuam had a reading of 125 micrograms of alcohol per 100 millilitres of blood when stopped by Garda Hugh Gallagher at Belclare on June 27 last year. She has no previous convictions.

Defending solicitor Eric Gleeson said that his client was very apologetic for what happened and happened to be taking medication. He said that she was her mother's car at the time.

Judge James Faughnan fined the defendant €300 for being over the influence of alcohol and put her off the road for two years; fined her €400 for no insurance and €100 for not having a driving licence.

House dispute

When Gardaí were called to a domestic dispute at housing estate in Tuam, they found a man in a drunken and very aggressive condition.

Pat Ward from 39 Hugh Heslion Road, The Glebe was before Tuam Court for a breach of public order. He admitted the offence. The Court imposed a fine of €150 for being drunk in a public place.

Garda Brendan Flaherty told the Court that the Gardaí were called to a domestic incident and found the defendant in a very intoxicated state. He was also very aggressive. The Garda added that the defendant had a number of previous convictions.

Passed out

A 34 year old man that was found passed out on a footpath in Tuam did not remember anything about the night, the local Court was told.

John Quinn from Forthbrowne, Lavally, Tuam was discovered by Garda Mark Shine at Bishop Street in an unconscious state. Sergeant Daithí Cronin, prosecuting, told Tuam Court that the defendant was very intoxicated and was taken to Tuam Garda Station. He outlined five previous convictions against the defendant.

Defending solicitor Danny McGrath said that his client was living on his own and this did not help matters. Quinn was fined €200 for being drunk in a public place.

Backlog delays barring orders

Emergency cases are still prioritised

BY ENDA CUNNINGHAM

THE average waiting time for domestic violence barring order and protection order applications to be heard in Galway jumped from one week to four weeks in the space of a year, according to new figures from the Courts Service.

According to the service's annual report for 2016, in the Galway courts area, it took an average of four weeks to hear domestic violence applications in the District Court - the wait was just one week the previous year.

However, urgent applications relating to domestic violence in Galway were heard on the next day the court sat.

In Family Law sittings, applications for maintenance or guardianship took between four to eight weeks to be heard, which remained unchanged from 2015.

Last year, civil cases took an average of 16 weeks to come before the District Court, unchanged from the previous year.

For criminal cases, charge sheets were heard on the next day the court sat, while the waiting time for summonses was 16 weeks - also unchanged from 2015.

In the Circuit Court, the average waiting time for criminal trials was between seven and nine months, while the wait for sentence hearings was three months (from the trial date when a guilty plea was entered). Appeals took two months to be heard. The waiting times were all unchanged from 2015.

Civil cases - which took between three and six months to come before the Circuit Court in 2015 - were being heard at the next sitting of the court.

Family law cases which had waits of two to three months in 2015, were also being heard at the next court sitting in 2016.

Music hits sour note

TWO Romanian nationals were ordered to pay €500 each to a neighbour whom they assaulted when he asked them to turn down the volume of music they were playing at 3am.

Both Novac Sebastian Florin and Zorro Dorit of Apt 1, Old Tescos, Sarsfield Road, Ballinasloe, pleaded guilty to assaulting their neighbour at their home on April 19 last year.

Sergeant Daithí Cronin, prosecuting, said that the victim had suffered soft tissue damage but the man, who was in court, told Judge James Faughnan, "it wasn't that simple" and that he had suffered injuries to his shoulder and arm for which he had to undergo physiotherapy.

When he went next door to ask his neighbours to turn down the music in the early hours of the morning, he was punched in the face and knocked to the ground.

He told the Judge that the two men before the court had since moved away.

Judge Faughnan said unless the pair had €500 each in compensation for the victim by the next court appearance in December, they would go to prison.

He said he would also impose a small fine of maybe €200 each.

Florin (27) and Dorit (29) had been working but weren't at the present, the Court heard from defending solicitor, Gearóid Geraghty. They had consumed too much drink on the night. The pair had no previous convictions.

The case was put back until December 7 to give them time to organise compensation.
