Eire is not a magazine propagandizing for the Irish language; it is a cultured publication that surveys in the Irish language many of the most important trends of our time and that in a vehicle of good writing. In the current issue "Sogh An tSeagall" by Tomás Bairéad, emphasizes what so many of us knew, that modern Irish literature has a short story writer of the highest talent. The same author shows both feeling and mastery of Gaelic verse modes in the poem: "VII Roman".

Appropriate for the times is the thoughtful article on "Democracy or Dictatorship" by An tAth. Feidhlim O'Briain. Father Malachy Brennan's contribution on Vocational Education and an article on "Commerce in Ireland in older times" by An tAth. Eóin O'Flaherty, S.J.

Seamus Wilmot discusses the public and Gaelic Drama with objective commonness; Sean Mac Neallan debunks a theory about the Ulster planters and Pádraig Mac Con Midhe, President, G.A.A., writes on "The Games in the Life of the Country." - T. W.
