 MINUTES OF BOARD OF GUARDIANS MEETINGS, 1894-1895, & 1913	 1

Introduction

This collection of Glenamaddy Poor Law Union archives consists of two Board of Guardian minutes books. The collection has been assigned the archival code of GPL1/.

The minute books were deposited with Galway County Libraries by Glenamaddy Arts & Historical Society with the compliments of Anthony Word several years ago. Unfortunately, the existence of the remainder of the collection is unknown, though it is possible the records were destroyed in a fire which occurred in the Workhouse in 1921.

Poor Law Unions

The poor law act for the 'more effectual Relief of the Destitute Poor in Ireland' was introduced to Ireland by the Poor Relief (Ireland) Act, 1838 and operated until 1921. The Poor Law system was originally constituted for the sole purpose of relieving paupers in workhouses, but by the 1880's had gathered to itself a great variety of powers. George Wilkinson, Architect, designed the workhouses.

Under the Act the country was divided at first into 130, later increased to 163, different poor law union administrative districts, each of which had a workhouse, financed by poor rates paid mostly by landowners. The Union areas in Ireland were formed by describing an area of ten miles radius around each market town. Initially the Act did not permit outdoor relief; assistance and relief to the destitute poor was granted only in a workhouse. However, by 1847 outdoor relief was granted.

Each Union was under the close supervision and control of a central governing body. Prior to 1847 the English Poor Law Commission had responsibility for the administration of the poor law in Ireland, thereafter a separate Poor Law Commission for Ireland was established. Its membership comprised of the Irish Chief Secretary, the Under-Secretary, and the Chief Commissioner. Assistant Commissioners, inspectors and clerks staffed it, and it supervised the election and proceedings of Board of Guardians. The Commission was abolished in 1872, and its functions were transferred to the Local Government Board. This Board was composed of the Irish Chief Secretary, the Under-Secretary, a Vice President and two commissioners. It took over responsibility for supervising the administration of the poor law system and public health legislation. The Board had a staff of regional inspectors and auditors to supervise and report on the activities of poor law guardians and other local authorities¹.

A Board of Guardians, consisting of two thirds elected and one-third ex-officio members, had direct responsibility for the administration of the union workhouses. The Guardians were generally local magistrates, landlords and the better class of farmers. Roughly $\frac{1}{4}$ of the Board's members ($\frac{1}{2}$ after 1847) were appointed from among the Justices of the Peace holding land within the Union. The remaining members of the Board were elected by the ratepayers whose holding was valued at £4 or over. The position was unpaid. Every ratepayer had at least one vote, and the number of votes increased according to valuation and other conditions in a most complex manner. The owners of property had similarly plural votes, the general maximum being six. Lists of Guardians are often found in various contemporary directories such as Slaters or Pigots, or may often be found in local contemporary newspapers.

The Board regulated, ratified and controlled, subject to approval from the central governing body, all aspects of Union administration. The Board was financed by the collection of rates, a property tax which funded a Union's operations. The poor law rate was until 1898 decided by the Guardians, thereafter the rate was struck by the newly established County Councils.

The Board was also responsible for the erection, maintenance and administration of a workhouse. In addition to providing directly for the poor and the day to day administration of the workhouse, the poor law guardians gradually accumulated further responsibilities. The Guardians became overtime, the public sewer-makers, the custodians of burial grounds and wells, the constructors of waterworks, the proprietors of dwellings for labourers, the executors of compulsory vaccination laws, and the laws relating to the sanitation of dwellings and public nuisances, and the repositories of a number of other powers down to the muzzling of dogs and the slaughtering of diseased animals².

For instance, in the early 1850's, under the Medical Charities Act of 1851, they were responsible for the provision and management of dispensaries to provide free medical attendance for the sick poor. From the early 1860's they were responsible for the boarding-out of children, and from 1883 under various Labourers Acts they were responsible for the provision of houses for agricultural labourers. The administration of the sanitary services was re-organised and codified under the Public Health (Ireland) Acts of 1874 and 1878. Under these acts the municipal corporations and town commissioners were appointed sanitary authorities for the larger urban areas and Boards of Guardians became the sanitary authorities for the rural areas and smaller towns.

² Muldoon, J. & McSweeney, G., A Guide to Irish Local Government Comprising an Account of the Law Relating to the Local Government of Counties, Cities and Districts, with a Full Explanation of the Act of 1898, Eason & Son, Ltd., Dublin 1898

Under the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898 county councils and rural district councils were established. The poor law guardians were also the rural district Councillors; the same individuals but working in a separate capacity. From 1898 the Boards of Guardians were 'restricted to poor relief and dispensary district work and were relieved of their power to strike a poor rate'³. The district councils were granted responsibility for the Unions' functions relating to housing and sanitary services. These functions were in turn transferred to council councils in 1925 following the dissolution of rural district councils under the Local Government Act of that year.

When the Poor Law was abolished in 1925 the Guardians remaining functions were transferred to county councils, and administered through Boards of Health and Public Assistance. These Boards were established by County Councils in counties outside of Dublin under the Local Government Act, 1925 to operate as executive committees of the county council to perform health, sanitary and housing functions, assuming responsibility for administering measures against infectious diseases and tuberculosis, sanitary arrangements, labourers' cottages schemes, water and sewerage schemes and school medical services in small towns and villages. The Boards were abolished in 1942 and their functions taken over by the County Council. The workhouses were replaced by a system of county homes for the old and infirm and hospitals for the sick. Outdoor relief was replaced by home assistance.

There were ten workhouses in county Galway. Those at Ballinasloe, Clifden, Galway, Gort, Loughrea, and Tuam were established in the 1840's. The Unions at Glenamaddy, Mountbellew, Oughterard and Portumna were established in 1852.

Galway County Council Archives holds some archives, mainly Board of Guardian minutes, from all Unions except Oughterard, and only one item for Portumna Union.

Summary History of Glenamaddy Poor Law Union

As only two minutes comprise this collection, it is not possible to give anything other than a very cursory history of the Union.

Glenamaddy Union was established after the famine, and was created largely from the southern part of the Castlereagh (county Roscommon) Union, and occupied an area of 157 square miles. The workhouse was opened 1852. Its construction cost was £5,250, and fittings were £885. Its original capacity was for 500 inmates⁴.

³ Meghen, P. J., The Development of Irish Local Government, in Administration Vol.8., No.4 Winter 1960, p339

The Union comprised the following electoral divisions, Ballinastack, Ballinkakil, Ballymoe, Boyounagh, Carranagur, Cloonkeen, Creggs, Curraghmore, Glennamaddy, Island, Kilcroan, Kiltullagh, Raheen, Scregg, Shankill, Templetogether, Tobberroe, and Toberadosh⁵

The population in Glenamaddy in 1881 is recorded as 19,971, and in 1901 it is recorded as 16,577.

The average cost of an inmate in November 1894 was £0.2.9 5/8, and the cost of an inmate in the Fever Hospital was £0.3.8. In January 1913 the average cost in the workhouse was £0.6.0, and in the Hospital was £0.7.0.

In early 1895 there was much distress in the Union district with calls from the ratepayers and the Board of Guardians for the government to introduce relief works in the area. The Guardians resolved, 'That the Government be asked to grant much needed relief works in this Union, such as drainage and making of new roads, or repairing old ones as much distress prevails, and if some employment is not given to the people, the Guardians are confident that they will severely suffer through dire distress, and that the immediate attention of the Government be called to the matter, and requesting that the part of the Union not already Schedule as distressed be schedules as such.' (GPL1/40, p291)

In February 1895 the Guardians were advised by the Office of Public Works that a loan had been sanctioned to the Guardians under the Dispensary Houses (Ireland) Act 1879 'for a sum of £1,000 for the purchase of land and the erection of a residence for the use of the Medical Officer of the Williamstown Dispensary District' (GPL1/40, p338).

'From around 1900, nursing at the workhouse infirmary was under the charge of the Bon Secours Sisters. The main building was burnt down in 1921. The hospital section later served as an orphanage and as the district dispensary. The remains of buildings now lie derelict. A memorial stands at the roadside⁶.

Arrangement

This collection consists of one category of records, minutes of the Board of Guardians.

The item reference number (e.g. GPL1/55) should be used in full when citing documents or records, and each reference cited should be preceded by the initials GCCA (Galway County Council Archives, e.g. GCCA GPL1/40).

The collection gives an example of the various aspects of the early administration of the workhouse and union district of Glenamaddy. It should be of interest to administrative, social, medical, and local historians.

The extracts from the two Minute books listed herewith are intended as a representation of the proceedings. The purpose of their inclusion is to give the reader an indication of the Guardians' areas of concern and responsibility. It is hoped that the extracts will clearly and fairly reflect their work and involvement with the administration of the workhouse, dispensaries and Union area.

Overall the collection is in fair condition. The minutes are recorded in bound volumes, on good quality paper, but the bindings are damaged with the result some pages are loose. Item GPL1/55 has several pages torn out.
